

The Nanakshahi Calendar is a tropical solar calendar that was adopted by the Shiromani Gurdwara Prabhandak Committee to determine the actual dates for important Sikh events. It was designed by Pal Singh Purewal to replace the Saka calendar and has been in use since 1998. Since 1998, amongst the critics, no one has come forward with logical suggestions of specific changes, other than to suggest that the Sikh people should revert back to the Vikrami calendar.

The starting point of the Nanakshahi calendar is the birth of the first Sikh Guru, Nanak Dev in 1469. New Year's Day falls annually on what is March 14 in the Gregorian Western calendar. The Nanakshahi calendar is accepted in about 95% of the Gurdwaras throughout the world, but there remains some controversy about the acceptance of the calendar amongst certain orthodox sectors of the Sikh world.

The situation with this calendar is similar to the one at the time of the implementation and acceptance of the Gregorian calendar in the late 16th century. Even after more than 400 years, some of the Greek Orthodox churches, the Ukrainian and Russian Orthodox churches still follow the Julian Calendar in their observances.

Most people in the Sikh community do, however, believe that the calendar is important as it re-affirms the Sikh faith's independence from the Hindu and Muslim faiths. Moreover, the calendar is based on historical research, astronomical science and astrophysics. It eliminates absurdities such as observing an event twice in one year and none in another.

Features of the new calendar

- a tropical solar calendar
- called Nanakshahi after Guru Nanak (founder of Sikhism)
- year one is the year of Guru Nanak's birth - 1469 CE [CE (Common Era) was formerly referred to as AD (Anno Domini)]

- year length is same as Western calendar (365 days 5 hours 48 minutes 45 seconds)
- contains 5 months of 31 days followed by 7 months of 30 days
- leap year occurs every 4 years in which the last month (Phagun) has an extra day
- Approved by Akal Takht in 2003
